Muslim Worldviews and Everyday Lives is not going to be the final word on Islam as a global civilization, but it provides the worthwhile service of introducing how anthropologists and others might conceive of Islam (and by extension other cultural systems) as more than local, or as local and global at the same time.

Muslim Worldviews and Everyday Lives (Reviewed by Susanne ...

1 An overarching aim with Muslim Worldviews and Everyday Lives is to present insights to scholarship about Islam and Muslim societies and to question the often derogatory misconceptions found in the global media discourse. El-Aswad is also critical of New Orientalism which he regards as an ignorant approach to Islam, focusing violence; and he holds it responsible for what he perceives as
